

Hugo review

The book «The invention of Hugo Cabret» is written by Brian Selznick. The book was published by Scholastic Press in 2007. I would say that this book is in the drama genre.

Hugo is living in a rail station, Hugo is afraid of the station inspector. Hugo is a little boy and he is living alone. The old man's name is George Melies and he owns a toy shop. Hugo is stealing from the old man. Hugo is a little boy that lives in the rail station and fixes clocks because his uncle died in a river when he was drunk. When Hugo was a little boy he's father died so Hugo had to take care of himself. Hugo has a mechanical man and he is trying to fix it because his fader had it before him. Hugo has a notebook that Hugo's dad owned before. In the notebook it is pictures of the mechanical man. Hugo needs parts for the mechanical man so he is stealing from the old man to get pieces to the mechanical man. He fixed the man and he used a key that the girl had.

The mechanical man drew a trip to the moon. George Melies draw the trip to the moon and he maked the mechanical man.

The book was good but not a book I would read because it's too much too read. The half of the book is invented and the other has happened in real life. The half book about George Melies has happened in real life, and that about Hugo is invented.
