

THE INVENTION OF HUGO CABRET

The invention of Hugo Cabret was written and illustrated Brian Selznick and published by Scholastic Press on 30 of January in 2007. The book use pictures like a movie to tell a story and words to tell what's being said by the carachters named: Hugo Cabret, George Mèliès, Isabelle, the train station inspector (and his dog), mama Jeanne, the Automaton. Hugo Cabret had a dad who was a clockmaker. he would go to a museum to fix the clocks every day. he once found a machine he find very interesting, he told Hugo about it and took Hugo whit him to the museum to show him the Automaton Hugo convinced his dad that he could fix the broken Automaton, his dad then got very interested and was away for a long time every day to fix the old machine. But one night the guard forgot he was there and locked him in a room. Later that night a fire went lose and he was killed in the fire.

Hugo's grandfather comes and takes him to the train station where he lives and teaches him how to fix the clocks, Hugo's grandfather isn't a very good man, he is and alcoholic and beat's Hugo many times, once his grandfather went to go for a trip, he didn't come back and after many days after he leaved he hadn't come back and Hugo assumed he was dead, he continued fixing the clocks so no one would understand that he was dead and leave Hugo alone so he didn't had to go to orphanage, once when he walked for a trip he went pass the museum and saw the Automaton in the museum so he took it and went home. Hugo then began fixing it at the train station. But he began stealing from an old man's toy both, that old man was George Mèliès George is a magician and a movie maker. Later you will learn his history. But one time he took Hugo by surprise and catch his arm, while Hugo screams in pain while the old man takes everything Hugo got in his pocket, when he goes to get his note book back, later in the story Hugo and a girl named Isabella try to seek out the secret of the automaton. When the automaton writes out a picture and a signature they understand that George Mèliès made the automaton, they also understand he made movies. In the end they all lived happily the rest of their lives.